Laminated Veneer Lumber (LVL), as one of the engineered wood product, promises strength enhancing and dimensionally stability. LVL has been rising as the star in the construction industry for use as roof trusses, transmission poles and purlins.

For construction, larger sizes of timber are mainly used. However, an increase in the logging activities and illegal logging has caused the declining of large sizes timbers. LVL is one of the immense alternatives that can provide larger size timber with design strength properties.

This book is aimed to provide preliminary technical data on the LVL manufactured using selected Malaysian Tropical timber.

Tropical rainforests represent such a complex wilderness area, and are considered to be the reservoir of Earth's biological diversity. Gunung Ledang Johor National Park forms the main region of tropical rainforests in Malaysia, and the country's current position as one of the mega diversity countries in the world is largely due to these rainforests. Despite their importance in terms of biological diversity, rainforests in Malaysia have received little attention in research they deserve. The publication of this book is seen as an essential moving point for Universiti Teknologi MARA (UiTM) in its research and development plan towards more multidisciplinary research and publication for scientific references or general reading for the public. We hope that this book will contribute to the expansion of knowledge, understanding and appreciation of Malaysia's natural resources.

LANGUAGE CHOICE OF THE YOUNGER GENERATION OF EDUCATED BIDAYUH

Authors:

CAESAR DEALWIS

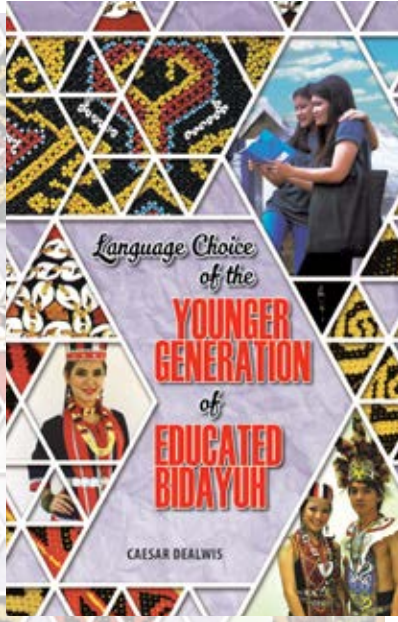

ISBN : 978-967-363-187-2

Price : RM 43.00

Year of Publication : 2016

Pages : 272

The major linguistic problem faced by the Dayak Bidayuh in Sarawak, is that there is no one common Bidayuh language which can unite the four main Bidayuh communities. The younger generation of Dayak Bidayuh's linguistic repertoire is influenced by their linguistic environment, whether it is in the rural or urban areas in the Bidayuh Belt and also the Malaysian education system. The main focus of this book is to determine whether the rural or the urban Bidayuh of both genders are maintaining or have shifted from their ancestral dialects. The younger generation of educated Bidayuh often uses Sarawak Malay, English, Bidayuh and Bahasa Melayu in a number of domains. Many of them are also becoming less proficient in Bidayuh compared to their parents or grandparents. Code-switching is the most dominant pattern among the younger generation of educated Bidayuh during interactions. It is practical to accommodate because there is no common Bidayuh language. Therefore, there are a lot of borrowings from Bahasa Melayu, Sarawak Malay and English for practical convenience. However, Bidayuh dialect is still a choice language preferred by the educated Bidayuh undergraduates to express their Bidayuh identity.

The attractiveness of Malaysia has drawn many here as short-term tourists. However, it is now possible for these tourists to lead a life in a home away from home in this wonderful country. Malaysia is a country that has much to offer to anyone who is considering living abroad – the serenity of its weather with all-year round of sunshine, the tranquility of its island and beaches, the astounding biodiversity in the rainforest. And that is not all – the affordable cost of living, the availability of modern infrastructure, the cultural diversity and the stable government – these are the reasons to live here. This book takes the MM2H Programme one step further; it offers insights into the experiences of MM2H enthusiasts who are currently second-homers in this country. To some of these MM2H participants, the term “second home” is no longer suitable because this is in reality the only home!

The astounding biodiversity of Malaysia's rainforests is unique and invaluable. Flora and fauna intermingle to form an intricate and complex ecosystem that is often mistakenly perceived as static throughout the centuries.

In actual fact, the flora and fauna have been constantly evolving over millions of years, with its extent and distribution changing over many periods in time. Taken as a whole, this book illustrates the impressive range of Kuala Keniam's natural treasures and highlights the tremendous natural diversity of this extraordinary area.
